The New Theatre was built on the project of the engineer Sesto Boari between 1925 and 1926, located in the heart of the old town, in Piazza Trento and Trieste 52. The architecture of the facade appears understated, decorated with three columns that support a large balcony from which two large windows overlook. The interior features a bell plan with a large audience and two orders of galleries while the decorations feature stucco and reliefs in late Art Nouveau style.
